JUST FANCY THAT!

PROPHET OF DOOM

"THE Solar System was ruled by total terror. There could only be one hope for galactic peace – and that meant violent death... Boris Johnson felt the tension rising within him as the seconds crept by. He brushed his hands against the reassuring bulge of his laser gun."

So begins the blurb for Agent of Chaos, a dystopian sci-fi novel by the American author Norman Spinrad which Eye reader Sarah Bates found recently in a second-hand shop. It was published in 1967, three years after Alexander Boris de Pfeffel Johnson was born.

Boris Johnson leads the Democratic League, a tiny resistance movement challenging the intergalactic tyranny known as the Hegemony. He is the book's main protagonist, but a notably ineffectual hero. "Boris Johnson was quite willing to babble on – and did so at every opportunity – but the man was a fool," we learn.

A shadowy third force, the Brotherhood of Assassins, tries to spread chaos by opposing both the Hegemony and the Democratic League. "While I do wish to see the Democratic League removed," says a leading Assassin, Robert Ching, "I don't want to see Boris Johnson killed." A colleague accuses him of going soft: "I do believe you've developed a certain fondness for Johnson!"

Ching smiles. "Why not?" he says. "I admit it. The man is a bumbler, he stumbles in the dark, ignorant of even the Democracy he professes to champion. He does not even have the assurance of the Theory of Social Entropy that the Hegemony must someday collapse. The history of the Democratic League is a catalogue of dismal failure. Yet still he fights on. Blind courage is, after all, a Random Factor. So is heroism. So too, for that matter, is sheer stupidity – and Johnson, paradoxically, is a source of all three."

Accused of having an "emotional desire to save Boris Johnson", Ching smiles again: "But consider: is not emotion itself a Random Factor? If we save Boris Johnson for no rational reason whatever, are we not remaining true to Chaos?"

After various intergalactic betrayals and battles, including blowing up an asteroid, we reach the final page and what reads like a premonition of eternal Brexit: "The struggle was just beginning. In another billion years, it would still be just beginning. It would always be beginning. Boris Johnson, frail mote of temporarily reversed entropy, looked upon the billions of stars stretched before him, islands in an infinite ocean without bottom, without shore, without end – and looked squarely for the first time in his life upon the countenance of Chaos."

MODESTY BLAZE

"Joan of Arc was the first freedom fighter that I was aware of. I can relate to her because I do fight for what I believe in. And when you fight for what you believe in, there's always going to be a punishment waiting for you, sometimes big and sometimes small."

– Madonna, Mojo magazine, August issue
